Attitude Reports with Attitudinal Objects

FRIEDERIKE MOLTMANN
(Centre Nationale de la Recherche Scientifique)

This talk will elaborate the view that clausal complements of attitude verbs do not stand for propositions but rather act semantically as predicates of attitudinal objects, entities like claims, promises, assumptions, and hopes. The talk will show how the view applies to different types of attitude verbs and other sentence-embedding predicates and discuss what sort of syntactic structure best goes along with it.
